GRAYLING, MICH.

The office of J. O. Hadley, Prosecuting Attorney, has been moved from Michigan Avenue to Cedar street, opposite his residence.

At the republican County Convention last week, the following committee was elected for the ensuing year:

W. H. Sherman, Maple Forest.

Dan'l S. Waldron, South Branch.

Luther A. Smith, Groves.

J. E. Hastings, Beaver Creek.

S. Hutt, Centre Plains.

J. M. Jones, Grayling.

M. O. Atwood, Ball.

At a subsequent meeting of the committee, J. M. Jones was elected chairman, and O. Palmer secretary.

The democratic meeting at the Open House, last Thursday evening, was fairly attended, a good many Republicans being present. Mr. Finn paid a glorious tribute to the acts of the republican party for the first twelve years of its life, and followed with the assertion that the days of its usefulness were over, as the party had become corrupt by long continuance of power. This is simply democratic assertion without proof, and we disagree with him on that point, as well as on the tariff part of his speech, for while we give him credit for honesty of opinion, we believe him entirely wrong in his conclusions.

TAMMANY EATING CROW.

The Democratic Braves Indorse
Cleveland and Hendricks.

They Adopt an Address, in Which the Shortcomings of the Head of the Tie,
et Are Recounted—Ex-Senator Grady
Declares for Ben Butler.

A large and distinguished assembly of Democrats met in the great hall of the Tammany Society on the evening of the 12th to take part in the first performance of John Kelly's interesting comedy, entitled "Eating the Crow." After some routine business the Chairman called for the report of the Committee on Organization. This was read and, although a very long document, was listened to with great interest. The conclusion is that the Tammany braves had decided to support Cleveland and Hendricks was received with fair applause. The shortcomings of the head of the ticket were specifically connected to meet the general idea of party allegiance. There was a total lack of enthusiasm which usually obtains in Tammany gatherings, and the endorsement, such as it was, was humorously made.

Ex-Senator Grady spoke at considerable length opposing the adoption of the report and the passage of the concluding resolution. The following is a full synopsis of his remarks:

He said he felt the measure of his opposition to it would amount to merely protest, but he could not reconcile with the frankness of the Tammany braves for the organization to endorse a measure of protest, an action which might be implied from silence on his part at this moment. This was the first time he had ever been in a high position in the position of the leader of Tammany, but it compelled to fall away from his side because he was principally responsible, and a strong and powerful leader, for the organization to control his action. Mr. Grady fell into the position he was about to take because of the fact that he had been elected to the party will have gained, and Tammany, as well as the Democracy generally, would be compelled to concede him in the recent election. He had no objection to the principles which they had inherited from the fathers of their political faith. It was a natural and logical consequence of the action of the majority who were in the minority, and he had no objection to it.

He then went on to say that neither in the Tammany nor in the Democratic party was there any opposition to the great body of Democratic voters for its support. The great majority of the delegates to the convention who named Mr. Cleveland as their first choice were agreed. Hendricks, who openly and earnestly opposed his nomination were reprobated in the minds of the men who favored his candidacy. Every influence and control was employed or exercised by the monopolists who had secured the control of the party leadership, and defected as well as their homes told in their professions of hostility to his candidate. They were in a certain degree members of the party, gave their names, and after the arrival at Chicago of a change of heart, when only the most simple and charitable have as yet been able to perceive the suppressed motives of the men who urged his nomination were to conciliate disgruntled members of the party.

He then went on to say that in his opinion, if he had been elected he would have done his best to secure the nomination, which was or that in his election there could be any vindication of Democratic principles. He was not in any way a participant in their party, and he was not a participant in their party as to suggest that in his nomination there was any regard for their service to the Democracy. On the contrary, he was in a position to know that the party who had held the party organization together under defeat who would have done their best to secure the nomination, which was or that in his election there could be any vindication of Democratic principles.

No one, argued Mr. Grady, could say there was any greater occasion for this indecision than the party of the South, who did not in the election in which he had been denied a vote to give effect to the protest they made in the convention. Mr. Cleveland would have done his best to secure the nomination for the received from Tammany, which secured every man to recognition in the important position of his party, and he had done his best to secure his success in a most devoted manner. Cleveland's greatest boast is that over election his chief aim was to secure the nomination.

He then went on to say that he had no objection to the nomination of Mr. Butler, and that he would support him most for the purpose he has in mind.

You can have no quarrel with those who do not support Mr. Cleveland, and he has no objection to their doing so.

He then went on to say that he had no objection to the nomination of Mr. Hendricks, and he had no objection to the nomination of Mr. Butler, and he had no objection to the nomination of Mr. Cleveland.
